Monroe Cox Kills "Son" Daniel Near Gutrie.

A dificulty occurred on the Webb farm in the Pond River neighborthood, four miles from Guthrie, in which a little boy lost his life. It It seems that Monroe Cox, white, aged 12 years, and "Son" Daniel, colored, aged 14 years, were out on the farm together when they became angered. Cox pulled his pocket-knife and cut Daniel in the bowels, the boy bleeding to death. Dr. R. W. Frey, of Trenton, was sent for, but did not reach his patient in time to give relief. Investigation.

The dead body of an infant was found near the stand-pipe by Lizzie Whitlock, col., and the fact was reported to Coroner Allensworth, wh has for several days been making a quiet investigation of the matter. The body had the appearance of having been cut to pieces and placed in a box, and was so badly decomposed that it was impossible to say positively whether the child was white or black.

to say positively whether the child was white or black. It had first been wrapped in an old shirt and then in an oil cloth and the box was deposited under the roots of a tree in a gully and covered over with dirt and brush. Recent rains had washed the covering from the box, and thus it was that it was discovered. The remains were placed in a coffin and burried in the potter's field. As a result of the Coroner's investingresult of the Coroner's investiga-tion arrests may follow.

Now there are half a dozen cottages and permanent fishing camps on its shores, and a sawmill at the outlet run by electricity. As I listened to the piano within doors, played by a pretty girl visiting from Kansas, the whistle of the railroad train crossing the 190-feot-high bridge which spans the outlet, a mile and a half below the cottage, mingled with the strain of Chopin. The advance of civilization indicated in the railroad and sawmill is very sad, but convenient, to lovers of the wilderness, who may get their mail daily and take a train cast or west several and take a train east or west several times in the day at the Onawa sta-

"Hung around the walls of the re-ception-room in the cuttage were pue-tures and woodland trophies. On the mantel was a picture about a few square, plainly framed, and taking it up and holding it in the proper light my hostess acked me what I saw in it. It was a landscape of wood-and sky and water, painted appar-ently in the impressionist style, but with the mellow tints of one of the old masterpieces, and exquisitely beautiful and natural. Its composi-tion was a stream in the foreground, beautiful and natural. Its composi-tion was a stream in the foreground, rippling silver, with shoals and cd-dies, a birch woodland on the left with such tall straight-stemmed trees with such tall straight-steinmed trees as one finds in the timber regions of Maine and a reach of lake beyond the birches, with an inclosing back-ground of dark, wooded mountains and a sky with floating clouds.

THE BICYCLE

Not Used So Much for Plea

Adoctor in New York, the member Adoctor in New Yerk, the members of his profession being posted on all sorts of apparently unconnected sub-jects, says that the bicycle as an amusement is 4 thing of the past— that people who ride wheels do so not for pleasure but for business or as a means to an end. They are saying in Cormose, one that the hievies has that people who rade wheels do so not for pleasure but for business or as a means to an end. They are saying in Germany now that the bicycle has done away with the unpopular chaperone only to be itself an unpleasant must-be. The lack of cenventionality which the bicycle is sure to bring in its train has placed men and women on so much easier footing that the chaperone has become obsoleto. But in the meantime the German frau and fraulein are mourning because they are bound to their iron steeds. Some of them have to ride to reduce in weight, some of them ride because of their delight in the emancipation from whalebones and long skirts, and others ride because their friends do, and hate it because they get warm, red faced and lose all their pretty frizzes. One presumably pretty prizzes. red faced and lose all their pretty frizzes. One presumably pretty fraulein confesses that she has to take a spirit lamp along on her wheel, and a curling iron, to enable her to get home in a presentable condition. It is difficult to tell how all these troubles can be remedied and it was It is difficult to tell how all these troubles can be remedied, and it really does not seem that the bike should be blamed for all of them. Evidently there is more trouble in Germany than here. There are a good many women riders to be seen on the Brooklyn cycle path, but as yet their way is not marked with flickering flames where disheveled young women are "curling up" preparatory to getting home in presentable condition. In fact, most of the girls look rosy and home in presentable condition. In fact, most of the girls look rosy and healthy, and the ones who are not bicycle fiends, very pretty. It still looks as if a few people were riding for pleasure.—N. Y. Times.

"Look more closely, the lady said, and held the picture nearer to me. Then I saw that what I had taken for carvas was birch bark and the varied colorings were natural tints in its texture. Seen near or far, the perfection of its design was undiminished. It could be described best as a landscape photographed in colors upon the bark.

"It was as you see it, the frame excepted, when it was taken last week from the tree, 'she continued. We were entertaining a large party of young friends at the cottage, and they had brought in a quantity of birch bark from the woods. The girls were busily at work shaping the bark into sunbonnets for themselves when one of them discovered the picture upon the pice she was handling, and she gave it to me. Of course we value it highly on several accounts—it is a part of our landscape translated to the sheet of bark. It does not seem as if it could have come there by accident, yet we have no hotory to give for it, and only one of our visitors has attempted to account for it."

"And what did he say? I inquired.

Golf as an Industry.

According to statistics golf at the present moment means an annual expenditure of £2,000,000. Probably this is an under-estimate. There must be somewhere about 2,000 golf clubs and club houses in the world.
Each of these require a staff of servants almost comparable to that of an average hotel. Almost every one has at least one "professional" or clubmaker, who has to attend to the actual maker, who has contend to the actual wants of the members in such matters as clubs and balls, who has men in his employ, and who may see that the links of the club are kept in order, al-though a special officer or greenkeeper is often retained for this duty, an or is often retained for this duty, and, of course, is paid a special salary. In addition, each club has, partly at least, under its control a large and often ragged regiment of "caddies," of almost all ages, who carry clubs for players at a fixed rate.

A VICIOUS ELEPHANT. rcus Animal That Has a Record of Nine Men Killed.

Niss Men Kuled.

A long time ago a boy in Charlotte,
N. C., sat up to see the circus come in.
A vicious old elephant, Chief, was being let out of his car. He took a sudden fit of anger against his keepc, man of the name of King, and just mashed him against the side of the car.

car.

King gasped out: "Turn May loose!" and died. "Mary" was the mother of the herd. Chief started on the run, trumpeting with fury, and the people that had come to see scat-tered like sparrows. Mary pursued and caught up with the runaway in and caught up with the runaway in the courthouse square. She tore the handle out of the town pump and be-labored Chief with that till she got him back to the show. What he saw then scared that boy of elephants. He now has the contract for supply-ing $225 worth of hay and feed for the horses and elephants of the cir-cus, and he it was who said to the writer:

writer:
"Look out for that fellow.

"Look out for that fellow. He's got a record of nine men. Unless you'd like to make the tenth."
"But old John! Why, there wasn't a bit of hurm in old John, was there, John. Nice old fellow. Shake hands. Pretty big hand, isn't it? Want to see if there are any peanuts in my prockets?" ckets?"

It gave one the horrors to see the great gray serpent of a trunk winding about the man's waist.

Every year, when this show goes to Charlotte, all hands take a day off and go in procession to the cemetery, the band playing Chopin's funeral march and the elephants shuffling in the lead. Chief isn't there, because they had to kill him in Cincinnati. He got too wicked. There is an elephant carved on the big marble monument. The elephant mark their ment. The elephant-men take their chances every minute of having one like it for $40 a month and board. At the end of every season they promise themselves and each other that they will never look at an elephant again. But when the time comes for the show to come out of winter quarters, and the performers meet to practice and work off the winter's fat and stiffness, the bull men show up, too. At least one of them comes of good family and has a college education.—Eugene Wood, in Ainslee's. se themselves and each other that

RUBBER CULTURE.

Good Field for Making Money in Cen-tral America. tral America.

"Rubber culture in Central America offers a splendid field for a poor man," said Mr. J. S. Nodine, manager of the largest rubber plantation in Nicaragua. "Just as an illustrain Nicaragua. "Just as an illustra-tion let me tell you of the experience of a neighbor of ours named Wester-field. He came to Nicaragua less than four years ago from somewhere in New England, and brought with him a wife and little child. He was wery much run down and weakened with consumption, and came to the tropics to try to regain his health. I happen to know that he didn't have a ar, and he was glad to take a job clerking at about $40 a month gold. Being naturally shrewd and energet-ic, he made a little money trading, and bought a 160-acre tract which he proceeded to have cleared by degrees, setting it out partly in rubber trees and partly in banans and fruits. In a year the fruits began to return a small revenue, which he used in ex-tending the cultivation, his idea be-ing to have eventually a well-stocked tending the cultivation, his idea being to have eventually a well-stocked rubber plantation, and in the meanwhile to make the other things pay the expenses. By good management and industry he carried out the programme, and in the second year openal a small store for trading with the Indians. After that it was easy, and in considerably less than four years he had one of the nicest rubber groves in the republic. The trees are now on the point of giving their first yield, but recently his wife's health failed and he was obliged to return north, having completely recovered himself. Four weeks ago he sold his rubber plantation as it stands for $23,000 in gold. This is an exceptional case, I admit, but at the same time there is absolutely nothing about it that cannot be duplicated by industry and pluck."—M. O. Times-Democrat.

Believes in the Newspaper.

Believes in the Newspaper.

Mayor Price, of Macon, Ga., who has held the place for 14 years, is a great believer in the newspaper as an educator. For years he has out of his own pocket paid the subscriptions for a considerable number of papers which he ordered left at the homes of persons who were unable to pay for each a necessity of up-to-date life. Mr. Price is fully convinced that his action has been productive of much good.

NOTABLE NOTE BOOKS How Many Literary Men Garner Much Material for Future Work.

A diminutive but delightful note-book, used by Charles Dickens, is now in the proud possession of an Ameri-can admirer of the eminent novelist who gladly gave the sum of 30 guiness she gladly gave the sum of an guitage of his prize. Therein is portrayed a characteristic word-picture of the pertinent "Pecksniff," whom the unthor first met in the flesh at a public dinner in Holborn.

Conan Doyle, who is severely systematic in his work, never travels.

conan Boyle, who is severely systematic in his work, never travel without an ample supply of memoran dum books, which he packs with racy records of his impressions of place and people. These tiny volumes he then places in his library, and, by wears of a index reference book! then places in his library, and, by means of an index reference book is able at any time to turn to them for mid when occasion requires. Some of the notebook contains subject-matter for work two years ahead, and their loss would be a serious matter to the author.

Rudyard Kipling has some notebooks in his possession for which he would not accept £50. A few of these have been filled with valuable copy during his visit to America, and contain sufficient material for months of literary labor. This prolife writer has piles of little memorandum books in his study at Rottingdean, containing stores of salient suggestions for new stories and virile verses, besides much that is actually ready for publication, but his severest critic is himself; his revisions are rigorous, and the public only see his best.

Thomas Hardy garners much golden grain for his realistic novels in numerous little notebooks with which he is ever well equipped. If favorite fashion is to tramp about the leafy lanes and wide wolds of his native, county, where he chats freely with almost every character he encounters, and afterwards records his impressions of all he sees and hears for future use. Much useful material for his novels is acquired by this method. George R. Sims carries a corpulent notebook wherein he is constantly recording ideas and impressions for prospective work. Some of his notebooks, filled from cover to cover while traveling, have proved veritable gold mines when transformed into tren-Rudyard Kipling has some note

A FEMININE QUERY.

Woman and Her Best Dress-The Unused Parlor.

In an article that we have seen somewhere lately, the interesting question is asked: Why is it that most women prefer to wear a "est" dress to the best? We sh best" dress to the best? We shall not attempt to answer it, but few men with wives or daughters will doubt the statement. A new dress, just in the mode, is hung safely away in the closet, and the "second best" just comes to be used with comfort when its superior is safely housed. We have observed the same thing about rooms. Furnish your parlor nicely, put down a new axminster, and get what goes with it, "and the wife of your heart will hardly permit you to light the fire in the grate, or to use it as a sitting-room. However cosy you used to find the room in, the days when it was half shabby, you will find it so no We shall not ling-room. However cosy you used to find the room in, the days when it was half shabby, you will find it so no longer. It is the best room, and must be kept as best. You will have to look for your open fire, and for a place in which you can read and lounge, in some other quarter of the house. In making the room distinctly better than the rest you have shut yourself out of it. Probably people who live in palaces, and can gratify every wish, do not feel and act in this way; but we appeal to the average man whether it is not true that his wife will greatly prefer to hang up her best dress in a closet rather than wear it, and whether he does not find that he has made his parforless usable by furnishing it much better than the other rooms in the house.—Boston Watchman.

Fostmen and Lloss.

In the absence of any better means, the mail bags in the British Central Africa protectorate are for the most part carried on the heads or backs of native postmen, who wear a uniform. Owing to the presence of lions, which are frequently met with, it is necessary that the bearers of her majesty's mails should travel in couples and be armed with rifles. During last year the postmen, whose aggregate rounds averaged 10,000 miles per month, were obliged, in defense of themselves, and their charge, to fire some 40 rounds of ammunition at wild beasts; and the gratifying fact is statically appeared to the same of the country of the 40 rounds of ammunition at wild beasts; and the gratifying fact is stat-ed that in no case was a single letter-carrier injured or a mailbag delayed in consequence of the lions in the way.
